Catarrh is Produced.

A Nose, Throat and Lung Specialist Gives His Experience in Treating It-Is it Curable.

Ing It—Is it Curable.

That Catarrh has many victims in this city, is evinced by the fact that every other person you meet has either a muffled voice or some other evidence of catarrh. The writer was introduced to a prominent nose, throat and lung specialist not long since and from him obtained the following truths regarding the disease:

"It is a well known fact that a mucous membrane having become the seat of an inflamation which has lapsed into the chronic stage sconer or later, becomes thickened and puffed up.

This tendency is more marked in the masal cavity, berhaps than in any other of the mucous tracts, and for several reasons. The hasal passages are composed of rigid walls, and are traversed by the current of air in breathing and virtually nothing more. The result therefore of taking cold and neglecting it, is a chronic inflamatory condition which produces thickening of the mucous membrane lining the nose, and the part involved, is that evering the turbinated bones which are like ridges rivating from the front to the back of the nose. They are seen in figure 1, and are three in number.

Mr. Peter Holt, 2028 Castellar street, Omaha, says: "Some six or seven years ago, I contracted some severe colds which soon turned into a bad form of catarrh, and for a long time I suffered terribly, but on the advice of a friend I called on Dr. Jordan, and to-day I am a well man. I treated with him for three months and the result is a complete and radical cure. I would advise all sufferers from that dread disease to give Dr. Jordan a trial."

Mr. Harry Laufenberg, 421 South 19th street, a bricklayer, says: "I contracted catarrh in Minnesota about five years ago and had an awful time of it for that length of time, but was completely cured of it by Dr. Jordan after two months treatment. Dr. Jordan is a painstaking and contentions physician, and I treats catarrh on scientific and common sense principles, and I think that it was the best day's work I ever did when I started treatment with him.

Oharles Kleyla, 2613 Hamilton street, foreman for Hosenzweig Sign and Decorative Company says:

"I consulted physicians of course both here."

"I consulted physicians, of course, both here and in Illimois, and one of the best doctors in the city said I would have to get out of this city to find relief. I did not get out of the city, but I did call upon Dr. Jordan, whose offices are Nos did call upon Dr. Jordan, whose offices are Nos. 310 and 311 Ramge Block, corner 15th and Harney streets. I was advised to call upon Dr. Jordan by friends of mine who had been benefitted by Dr. Jordan's treatment. I placed myself under Dr. Jordan's treatment. I placed myself under Dr. Jordan's treatment. I placed myself under Dr. Jordan's treatment. I felt MCCH BETTER IN A SHORT TIME after beginning and continued to improve right along. The paths in my chest have stopped and I can breathe freely and regularly. Mymemory is very much improved and my speech is clear and distinct again. My stomach is all right and my appetite is good. My nose and throat are in good condition and I can breathe naturally again. I am very well satisfied with Dr. Jordan's treatment, and I shall certainly advise all my friends to call upon Dr. Jordan if they are troubted as I was."

Mr. Juo. Thornton, Blair, Nebraska, a farmer.

Mr. Jno. Thornton, Blair, Nebraska, a farmer, says:

"I was in a very bad way. I had been reading the advectisements of Dr. McCoy for some time and at last I concluded that I would call on him and give him a trial; I did so. I went to Omaha and called at the office and was examined by Dr. Jordan who told me he could cure me. I did not tell him that I had had this catarrh since the war. I was afraid that he would tell me that I had had it too long and could do nothing for me, so I told him that I had had it about seven years, but that made no difference, he commenced treating me and gave me medicine to use at home and he cured me entirely and was under his treatment for two months and in that time he only saw me three times as I was too far away from his office to take office treatment. He has certainly done for me what treatment. He has certainly done for me what smany others have tried to do and failed, and I want to give him the credit for it too. I took my sister down to the doctor too, and she is getting better very fast and I do not doubt in the least that in ashert time she will also be cured.

Suicides on His Wedding Day. Springfield Republican: William R. Vandermon, a son of ex-Judge Vandermon, Chaumont, St. Lawrence county, New York, committed suicide at Sandy Creek, N. Y., a few days ago, three hours before the time set for his wedding. Vandermon, who is twenty-two and a law student in his father's office, met Mis Frankie C. Matteson, of Sandy Creek, last July and the two became engaged. His father objected to the match, and refused to pay numerous debts that the young man contracted unless he gave up the girl. He refused and several merchants with whom young Vandermon had accounts called apon him at Sandy Creek for a settlement, but he put them off. His creditors met and determined to have a set-tlement of their accounts. They called upon the prospective groom and he promised to arrange matters and he started out among his friends to make a loan. He was unable to find anyone among them who would accommodate him. He was too proud to tell his sweetheart the predicament he found himself in, and started to walk into the country. Constables were watching his movements and it is said they had in their possession a warrant for his arrest for obtaining goods under false pretenses. They followed him into a small strip of woods, where they found him sitting upon a log. They asked him if he could settle the bills. His only reply was to put his hand in his pocket and take out a revolver, and before the astonished rustics knew what he was about placed it to his left breast, pulled the trigger and sent a bullet through his heart. Miss Matteson heard the news while preparing for her wedding. She fainted when informed of the occurrence, and it is feared her reason has left her. Young Mrs. Wall's Marriage.

New York Sun: William Fraher, a aechanic, tiving in Avenue D. Bergen Point, N. Y., has a dark-haired, dark-eyed, good-looking eighteen-year-old daughter named Kate. Two years and six months ago she married, against the wishes of her parents, a young fellow named Peter Wall, who was a cooper in Constable Hook. Wall lived for a time in the family, but finally his bride's parents drove him out. It is said he is now in Oil City. Since his departure it is said he has contributed nothing to the support of his wife and her seventeen-months-old child, and the mother and her babe continued to live with her parents.

Mrs. Wall formed ome months ago the acquaintance of C. Herbert Cadmus, a driver on the Greenville route of the Jersey City & Bergen railroad. Cadmus, who has just attained his ma-jority, is the son of Theodore Cadmus, a carpenter.

It is said that early in September he and Mrs. Wall went to Jersey City, sought out a minister, and were mar-They, however, kept secret the fact of their marriage. About a week ago a casual acquaintance noticed the pair walking together much engrossed with each other, and at the first opportunity informed Cadmus that the girl he was with was a married woman, with a living husband and child. Cadmus was apparently thunderstruck by the information. That evening he sought his father and made a full confession of his marriage, alleging that Mrs. Wall had deceived him, and that he had known nothing of her first marriage, her husband or her child. The next day the father had an interview with Mrs. Wall's father, the result being that her parents were at first tempted to turn her out into the street. relented, however, and she is still at home. She and her friends assert that young Cadmus was perfectly cognizant of all the facts concerning the first marriage, and that he was seen repeatedly carrying her child about in his arms. The fact that the girl and youth, in ap-parent ignorance of the law, have made bigamous marriage adds interest to The fathers of the couple will take immediate steps to have the illegal marriage annulled. What course the first husband will pursue when he learns of the circumstances is a source of conjecture.

Married to a Jap.

Bastimore Sun: Washington is talk-ing over the marriage of Mr. Shire Akabane, secretary of the Japanese legation, and Miss E. N. Barry, of Balti-more. Miss Barry is the daughter of Dr. Barry of Baltimore, and for four years past she has lived at Mrs. Owens' boarding house, 1,514 K street. She is of an old Washington family, and has relations living on Capitol Hill, among whom are Mrs. Ann Barry and Mrs Dayton Ward, both her cousins, and who reside on New Jersey avenue, near H street. Her grandfather is well-known here, and was a most ardent Catholic, and was one of the most foremost men in aiding the construction of St. Peter's Catholic church on Second street, southeast. All of her family have been of that faith. About five years ago Miss Barry came to Mrs. Owens' house and six months later Mr. Akabane became a boarder in the same house. They met often, and an acquaintanceship soon led to stronger bonds of friendship. Time ripened the friendship into love, and the fact be came known only to a few. Their engagement was kept very quiet, although surmised by many of Miss Barry's friends. Her delicate health forbade her mingling much in society. She is an amiable and talented lady, about twenty-five years of age, and during her residence here she has been somewhat retired in her life. Mr. Akabane is about thirty years of age, and has been acting charge d'affaires of the Japanese legation during the Japanese minister's absence. He is a highly cultivated gentleman, is a graduate of Trinity college, Hartford, Conn., and has been attached to the legation for four years past. Washington society was much charmed with him, and his presence was desired everywhere.

An English View of American Husbands.

well-known man of letters wrote in these pages to vindicate the superiority of American manners. He said that Amerwhich we believe to be true, especially where the women are concerned. See the testimony of "A Yankee Matron" in the Daily Telegraph.

My husband, like many other Ameri-

ans, does not outgrow the little thoughtful attentions that he paid me before our marriage. There are so many lit-tle things which go a long way towards making a woman's life happy; they cost nothing and yet they make such a dif-ference. For example, the morning and evening kiss; the word of praise, of sympathy, or of appreciation; the tap at the chamber door before entering; the helping hand in getting in or out of a carriage, omnibus, or train—these things are accepted as a matter of course by thousands of American wives; and it is only when they go abroad that they are struck with the contrast, especially on the continent, where they hear on all sides: "How the Americans do spoil their wives!" Englishmen have a habit of treating their wives much as they might treat their younger brothers or college chums. But there is something to be said for the American theory that the equality of the sexes ought not to go quite so far as that.

Marriage in Italy.

The Italian lover has always an eye to the main chance, says Chambers' Journal. Before entering upon any marriage proposal the lover makes it his business to find out what dowry is likely to be settled on the bride, and should it not come up to his expecta-tions, at once transfers his affections elsewhere. The question of dowry is discussed, and the amount bargained for, much in the same way as shop-keepers haggle over their wares, and the unfortunate girl who has no money in her own right, or upon whom her parents can afford to make no settlment stands but a sorry chance of securing a husband, and accepts the inevitable with a calmness of a better cause.

The bride in Italy is always supposed to furnish all the household linen for her establishment, not to be able to do so is a matter of disgrace. The number of articles included in her trosseau is enormous, and each one must be num-bered by dozens. This is an excellent rule as far as the husband is concerned, for it frees him from any anxiety for years to come on account of the state of his wife's wardrobe; but on the other hund, the poor are often unable to scrape together the clothes which the unwritten rule of society demands from them, and in many cases marriages are postponed from year to year until the requisite amount is provided.

A Bridal Trip Spoiled. Philadelphia Times: All who have ever passed through a bridal trip experience will appreciate the predicament in which a prominent pair found themselves after a brilliant wedding at the Aldine hotel. Hans Bjorn Graesse, a young banker from Dresden, was made happy that night by marrying Miss Verrier, whom he had courted and followed on two hemispheres. Having been successful after such a siege he de-termined to have a "bang-up" wedding and everything went off beautifully, notwithstanding the fact that the bride-groom was made more than ordinarily nervous by the ways and customs here, especially relating to fashionable weddings, which he did not thoroughly understand. Like almost till brides and bride-grooms they kept their intentions se-cret, but arranged between themselves not to go through to Washington on the train on which they would start, but to stop quietly off at Wilmington and spend the night there. In order to avoid carrying satchels and luggage, the bridegroom had a nice little sole-leather trunk made, and in this it was agreed they should pack all the delicate, dainty and particular things, such as brides and bridegrooms carry away with them. In order that there should be no mistake, and to avoid the call baggagetheck system, which he could not compreheud, the bridegroom had the trunk put on the carriage. It was in two compartments, and according to the etiquette of bridal trunks in the packing, the bride was allowed to put her things on top, and there were two keys. As they were ascending the steps at Broad street station Hans Bjorn Graesse saw the driver, whom he had feed liberally, carrying the trunk to the baggage

"Ah,,' he said complacently, "that is all right," and he smiled as he thought how he had circumvented the call baggage-check system. Upon arriving at the hotel at Wil-mington in the ecstatic and assumed indifferent way in which bridal couples usually arrive the bride was shown to her room and the bridegroom was sent for the trunk. He accordingly waited until the hotel wagon came, whereupon his hair almost stood on end at the discovery that no trunk came with it. The arrival of two unannounced strangers late at night in a town like Wilmington. especially with one of them nervous and no baggage, not even a satchel, is very unusual, and the bridegsoom soon found nimself an object of atiention. He went to the station and questioned everybody, but invariably the question asked was, "Where is your check?" and check he had not. Finally he sent up his card to the bride, and when admitted told her. In a short while messengers were sent out and the telegraph operator woke up, and then the messages began to flysuch messages as the wires have not carried in a long time. Relatives of the bridegroom and the bride's sister were aroused and startled by telegrams that mystified them.

It had been arranged beforehand that all the regular trunks, and there were a great array of them, should be sent yesterday to Washington direct. Yesterday morning, in answer to others. explanatory telegrams solved the diffi-culty, and the bridal trunk was found snugly reposing in the baggage room, where the driver took it, and where the bridegroom should have gone and exhibited his ticket and got a check. In it were all the lovely and dainty dresses, some of them from Paris, more from Dresden, and some of them the handiwork of kin, att intended to figure on the happy number trip, but prevented from the unfamiliarity of the bridegroom, though a banker, with checks.

All for Love. Atlanta Constitution: "That man's a horse thief and no son-in-law of mine. exclaimed an old gray-haired man excitedly yesterday morning at police neadquarters.

He was talking to a large crowd. Just in front of the old man stood a oung girl, quite pretty and well ressed. She was his daughter. Beside her stood a tall young man, to whom she clung tightly, while in the rear was a large crowd of persons filled with curiosity. The old mas gave his name as W. J. Burns' and said that the man that stood beside his daughter was Ben Morris. It was a story of love.

Old man Burns is a well-to-do farmer iving in Henry county. Ben Morris lives near by, and some time ago asked the old man for his daughter, but was refused. Night before last the girl left her home and went to the East Tennessee depot, where she was met by Morris. They boarded the train for Atlanta, and city, went to Judge Calhoun, where they secured a marriage license. They went Judge Owens, by whom they were married.

The old gentleman discovered his daughter's absence early yesterday morning, and from the note she left learned that she had gone with Morris. The old man hurried to Atlanta, having learned from the ticket agent that Morris had bought two tickets to this city. He reached the Union depot just as Morris, with his bride, were about to board the Georgia Pacific train, and caused his arrest, alleging that he had stolen some money. There was quite a crowd in the depot when the arrest was made, and the young lady attracted general attention by her screams. At the city prison she informed her father that she and Morris had been married. but the old man would not believe it and called his son-in-law a horse thief and many other bad names. He then asserted that Morris had stolen some money from him and caused his incarceration. Later when he found that his daughter would not return home with him he withdrew the charge and Morris was given his liberty. He left the city with his bride.

Failed to Understand the Ritual. It transpired that after the marriage of Miss Anne Lathrop of Detroit, Mich., says the Chicago Tribune, to the Baron Huene at St. Paul's church of that city and previous to the reception given at the Lathrop mansion, a second coremony was performed at the request of the Baron, who had been unable to understand a word of the English service. and had therefore failed to make the responses as provided in the Episcopal The baron speaks German, so the Lutheran minister was hastily called in and the wedding ceremony performed again, whereat the gallant young lieutenant of his Russian majesty's guards expressed the liveliest satisfaction.

He Did Not Want to Marry Her. Bert R. Plank, a young farmer, has James's Gazette: Some time ago a yesterday morning after reaching the says the New York World, a novel an-

He admits his marriage to the complainant, but he says he went through the ceremony under duress, on the night of September 9, 1886. He says that he was dragged from his bed by armed men, who hustled him off to Sycamore, Ill., where he found his wife, her father and friends awaiting him. He was confronted by a parson with a marriage license and a pretty girl on one side and what seemed to be certain death on the other, and was given his choice. Naturally, he chose the first combination, and though he was not yet of age, and his father, who was then absent from home, had not consented to his marriage, he was speedily made a Benedict. The young man says he would, had he been asked, rather have signed his own death warrant.

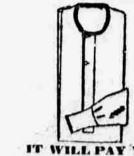

His wife and her father took him to hicago, where he sat up all night in his chair, eagerly waiting the dawn of another day, when he fled to his father's farm, and has been there ever since. He says that he never lived with his wife; that the marriage was illegal on account of the duress, and he therefore asks to have his wife's bill dismissed and the marriage declared void.
